Over the whole of recorded history, and probably before, numbers have held mystical powers for people. The most mystical number to the Pythagoreans was the number 10. Pythagoras (580 – 500 BCE) himself thought numbers had souls and magic powers. The most magical numbers in religion are three, four, seven, ten and twelve.

Clarification of the magic square governing human civilization? As noted above, having framed 1.5 as a "magic number", there is a case for a speculative focus on one of the most fundamental magic numbers as it features in the simplest magic square as a magic constant-- namely 15. This has the potential merit of indicating how the disparate domains governed by 1.5 may be interrelated.
